

How long does dispute take with Coinbase?(Investigation period)

A dispute with Coinbase can take different amounts [+] of time depending on the type of issue and how complex the situation is. Many users ask how long the dispute[+] process takes because delays can be frustrating, especially when money or account access is involved. [+] While there is no fixed timeline for every case, [+] there are general timeframes you can expect.

In most cases, the process begins when[+] you submit a support ticket through the Coinbase Help Center. Coinbase usually sends an automated confirmation[+] right away, but a detailed response from a support agent may take anywhere from a few days to one or two weeks. Simple issues, such as basic[+] transaction questions or account updates, are often resolved faster.

If your issue is not resolved [+] through regular support and you decide to file a formal complaint or dispute, the process can take longer. After submitting a formal complaint,[+] Coinbase typically acknowledges it within a few days. From there, the review process can take 15 to 45 days on[+] average. This timeline may vary depending on the nature of the dispute, such as account restrictions, missing funds,[+] or suspected fraud.

Disputes involving unauthorized transactions[+] or security concerns may take more time because Coinbase needs to investigate account activity, verify[+] ownership, and review blockchain transaction records. These cases can sometimes take several weeks, especially if additional[+] documents or identity verification are required from you.

If your dispute involves a chargeback through[+] your bank or credit card provider, the timeline may be longer. Bank chargeback investigations can take 30 to 90 days, as[+] both Coinbase and the bank must review the case. Coinbase has limited control over how quickly [+] banks process these disputes.
